

God can use you in a missional business.
He's using the Carlsons like this:

Coffee. People. Potential.

Long Miles Coffee is changing the lush hill communities of Burundi, one of the poorest countries in Africa—because Ben and Kristy Carlson love the coffee business and love the people even more. They work with thousands of farmers and their discipling “coffee scouts” to bring better coffee to market, which in turn increases farmers’ incomes. Long Miles Coffee covers coffee “from farm to cup,” mentoring coffee scouts, who then work with farmers. Together they are improving the grade of Burundi coffee that reaches higher-paying Western markets, improving washing stations and treatment processes for exporting coffee to wholesalers.

The potential for Burundi coffee is off the charts.

Ben Carlson, Long Miles Coffee

Whether we call it missional business, business as mission, or missional enterprise, it can work—for everyone.

BUSINESS AS MISSION

Helping you release the power of the Good News into the nations through missional enterprise

Join a missional enterprise and use your passion and professional expertise—or bring your own entrepreneurial ideas to life.

Navigator missional enterprises strive to live out Kingdom values in all dimensions of business while pursuing our priorities of spiritual transformation, financial sustainability, and social impact.

“Missional enterprises” (also known as business as mission or missional businesses) can include non-profits and non-governmental organizations as well as for-profit businesses.

The Navigators Global Enterprise Network exists to unleash the transforming power of the Gospel into other nations through an ever-expanding global network of Navigator missional entrepreneurs.

TRIPLE BOTTOM LINE

With Navigators missional enterprises, you'll be supported in your pursuit of the triple bottom line of spiritual transformation, financial sustainability, and social impact.

Over 300 Navigators around the world engage daily in missional business.

SOCIAL IMPACT

A good missional enterprise can create any number of Kingdom impacts:

- Provide employment
- Bring justice
- Shape education
- Combat disease
- Protect families and their environment

FINANCIAL SUSTAINABILITY

Navigator enterprises pursue a good business model. A financially sustainable enterprise can maintain a better business presence and last longer than a business for which capital and cash flow are only peripheral priorities.

SPIRITUAL TRANSFORMATION

Our business-as-mission enterprises are designed to make a lasting difference for generations of people.
